HITCHHIKING: The House for the second time approved a bill that would remove the state's existing prohibition on hitchhiking.

WILD HORSES: The House for the second time approved a bill that would specify that any programs within the Wyoming Department of Corrections that use wild horses have to use animals originally captured within the state.

EAGLES: The House for the second time approved a bill that would allow licensed falconers to capture golden eagles in certain areas if officials determine they're preying upon livestock. The bill also could offer American Indians a legal way to take eagles outside the Wind River Indian Reservation provided they had the necessary federal permits.
