POTTER, Neb. (ASSOCIATED PRESS) - A school superintendent says two people injured in the collision of a Potter-Dix school bus and a pickup Thursday in far western Nebraska were flown to a hospital in Scottsbluff.

Superintendent Kevin Thomas said Friday that seven students, the bus driver and the driver of the pickup were injured. All were taken to a hospital in Sidney. Thomas said he did not know whether the two flown to Scottsbluff were students and did not know their conditions, but said "both were stable when they boarded the helicopter."

Thomas says that of the seven who remained at the Sidney hospital, all but two were treated and released.

The Nebraska State Patrol and the Cheyenne County Sheriff's Department say the crash happened after school, around 4:20 p.m. Thursday.
