PIERRE, S.D. (AP) - South Dakota lawmakers have adjourned to end this year's legislative session after failing to override Gov. Dennis Daugaard's veto of a bill increasing the fee imposed to finance the state's inspection of commercial fertilizer.

The House and Senate ended the session about 12:45 p.m. CDT.

The Legislature had little to do on its final day because the governor vetoed only one bill after the main run of the legislative session that ended March 8.
