RAPID CITY, S.D. (ASSOCIATED PRESS) – Rapid City officials say construction is off to a fast start in 2013.

The city issued $54 million in building permits in the first two months, which is about a quarter of last year's nearly $208 million total.

Nearly $32 million in permits were approved in February, including a 216-unit apartment complex, a new hotel, and a pipe manufacturing facility.

Brett Limbaugh, the city's community planning director, says that the numbers are even more impressive when considering that the building season hasn't really started yet.
