INDIAN WELLS, California (AP) - With the baseball general managers' meetings taking place at a hotel owned by Rockies owner Dick Monfort, Colorado officials are meeting this week to discuss a successor for manager Jim Tracy.

Walt Weiss and Matt Williams are thought to be the favorites to replace Tracy, who quit Oct. 7 following a last-place finish in the NL West. Rockies bench coach Tom Runnells and first baseman Jason Giambi also interviewed.

Monfort has been meeting with general manager Dan O'Dowd and senior vice president of major league operations Bill Geivett at the Hyatt Regency Indian Wells Resort & Spa.

Geivett wouldn't say whether a decision could be made during the annual GM sessions, which end Friday.
